What is Motivating Them?

- I want to meet new people.
- It seems like a good learning experience.
- I have always been interested in global issues and in diversity.
- I love global problems and I'm interested in helping find solutions.
- I want to be a leader.
- It will help me in college.
- To see the change I can make either locally or something greater
- I want to work in an international business after college.
- I've been called a failure and I would like to prove the people wrong.

Student Reactions

Learning about and trying to solve international problems such as those with the economy sounds fun and interesting also I like making a difference

I enjoyed all of the audience participation and group work- getting to know other students trying to reach the same goal as me.

Classroom Resources

Educators have access to many outstanding resources that include international themes. However, students often respond to information when they can make local connections as well. The Columbus Council on World Affairs is a regional leader in Global Education — delivering programs directly to students, guiding policy initiatives at the district level, and providing resources to enhance classroom instruction. TeachGlobalColumbus.org is our classroom resources hub where we infuse local context and support to global content and vice versa. Please use our resources and share your own! Email Stephanie Calondis Geiger with questions.
